ABOUT ME

I am a PhD student on the National Doctoral Programme in Peace Studies (Curriculum 2 'Identity, Memories, Religions and Peace') and a Honorary Research Fellow (Anthropology of Religions; Cultural Anthropology) at La Sapienza University of Rome. Since 2023, I have been conducting qualitative research into the intersection of political and religious aspects in Brazilian mediumistic practices in Rio de Janeiro. Since 2025, I have expanded my research focus to include the cult of Santa Sara Kali in Brazil. My work centres on Postcolonial Studies and community care, with a particular focus on contexts of vulnerability, systems of care and social conflict. I have proven experience in facilitating groups, moderating round-table discussions and coordinating participatory events in complex, multi-stakeholder contexts. I have developed strong skills in active listening, interpersonal communication and mediation between different forms of knowledge (academic, traditional, artistic, community-based), whilst developing strong writing and summarising skills. Since March 2026, I have been undertaking a doctoral mobility programme as part of the MSCA Staff Exchange project RHEAL – Religion and Healing: Collaborative and Participatory Methodologies (Principal Investigator: Emily Pierini).

[2025 – 2027]

Thesis: "RHEAL - Religion and Healing: Collaborative and Participatory Methodologies" (PI: Emily Pierini)

RHEAL explores innovative interdisciplinary methods to promote collaboration between researchers, health care providers, religious and traditional healers, people with lived experience of mental health and their carers. Through an interdisciplinary approach combining anthropology, creative arts, sociology, psychology and psychiatry, the project addresses key issues in mental health with the aim of facilitating dialogue between different therapeutic approaches and improving the quality of care and knowledge exchange. Focusing specifically on mental health, trance and possession phenomena, RHEAL aims to bridge the epistemological gap between biomedical and religious, spiritual and traditional perspectives by identifying best practices for collaborative healing.

To achieve these aims, RHEAL uses ethnographic, micro-phenomenological methods and creative participatory approaches to develop co-designed, person-centred models of knowledge transfer. Visual arts and multimodal approaches - including participatory video, photography and sensory engagement - provide access to lived and embedded experiences of healing, rethinking knowledge production about collaborative healing through sensory interaction in everyday life with materialities and images to promote inclusive, sustainable and collaborative policies. Integrating the human, life and social sciences, RHEAL aims to create an interdisciplinary and applied methodological toolkit for mental health research and practice. By promoting innovative collaborative practices, the project aims to contribute to inclusive and sustainable health policies and to the global discourse on integrative healing. Under the concept of sustainability, RHEAL aims to create systems that are able to integrate people's experiences and traditional knowledge, and to welcome different epistemologies and therapeutic approaches side by side.

Phd Mobility and training - Faro Project (CIVIS Open Labs)

University of Bucharest, University of Rome [24/06/2025 – 15/09/2025]

Field(s) of study: Urban Anthropology; Patrimonial Anthropology; Intercultural dialogue

The FARO Project aligns with the principles of the Faro Convention (2005), which emphasizes the social value of cultural heritage in fostering democratic and inclusive societies. It advocates for a community-centered approach where local voices are integral in safeguarding and interpreting their heritage. The FARO Open Lab at Sapienza is inspired by this, promoting cultural heritage as a shared space for diverse identities and common notions of beauty, rather than as a tool for nationalism. The project aims to counter cultural segregation, especially for marginalized minority communities, by documenting, digitizing, and integrating their cultural narratives. By fostering open dialogue and participation, it actively combats cultural exclusion and supports the development of a more inclusive European space, resisting growing nationalism and division in society.

Knowing oneself through others: bodies, memories, and rights in dialogue. A journey starting with Afro and Romani dances Curation and moderation, as part of Anthroday 2026, of the Afro and Romani dance workshop and a round table discussion to explore movement and stillness as a common language between bodies, cultures, and memories. A journey through experiences, rhythms, and grammars of feeling, where dance becomes a space for encounter and mutual understanding. Through the body and listening, we deconstruct narratives to rebuild together new visions of citizenship, rights, and self-determination. A collective experience of expression and reflection on closeness and distance, mobility and rootedness, to rediscover the power of the body as an instrument of dialogue, self-determination, and (r)existence.

Proponents and participants: Eleonora Di Renzo (anthropologist and PhD student in Peace Studies, La Sapienza University of Rome); Swami Della Garden (student of Education Sciences, activist for the rights of the Romanè communities); Sara Formicola (dancer and performer, movement educator, teacher of African and contemporary dance, founder of the Afro&Rom Festival in Turin); Ivana Nikolić (artist and intersectional activist for the rights of the Roma minority)
